

Student Digital Safety Guide

ONLINE CHILD SEXUAL EXPLOITATION

Online child sexual exploitation consists of many forms of exploitation against children online, including persuading a minor (someone under the age of 18) to create child sexual abuse material (CSAM) or videos of themselves, and/or participating in sexual live-stream videos, whether they are recorded or not. Often offenders will manipulate the child to engage in such conduct by first building an emotional connection and relationship with a child, to gain trust, with the ultimate goal of sexual exploitation. Perpetrators also target children (predominantly boys) with financial sextortion to obtain financial gain and grooming.

Have a look at the conversation below and see if there is anything odd about it.

Spotting Indicators

Below is the same conversation. However, it now explains the process of enticement that could occur through social media, between a minor and an adult pretending to be a minor.

“Never before has it been easier for perpetrators to make contact with children and teenagers while avoiding physical contact. They identify potential victims and establish a relationship of trust with the sole purpose of exploiting them. This process of recruitment can be a stepping stone to trafficking and exploitation” (UNODC, 2018).

- + In this conversation, we see an interaction between two people, Ad.17 and a minor replying to the messages.
- + Ad.17 starts the conversation making a comment about a video that the minor uploaded to their social media account.
- + Ad.17 makes a comment about the minor’s age. Often, perpetrators will try to earn their trust by using flattering comments like these.
- + Very early in the conversation, Ad.17 asks for personal information about the minor’s school.

The reality is that Ad.17 is actually a 54 year old man called John. He is not 17 like he said he was.

INDICATORS IN THE CONVERSATION

Earning their trust: Often, abusers will approach minors online and try to earn their trust by using compliments, or relating to them in an emotional level.

Personal information: The perpetrator will often try to avoid sharing personal information, but will ask questions to the potential victim to find out as much as possible about them.

Pressure and compliments: They often use pressure or coercion to ask for things that would make the child feel uncomfortable (i.e., pictures/videos of themselves).

Grooming and Sextortion

Online Child Sexual Exploitation includes:

- Grooming: establishing a relationship and emotional bond with a minor to manipulate, exploit or abuse them.
- Sextortion: blackmailing or threatening a minor to share images or sexual content of themselves in order to get something, such as: new sexual content, money, meeting in person, etc.

In situations like these, children and young people may end up being the object of humiliation, abuse, exploitation, or even find themselves in a human trafficking situation.

Scope and Reach

Online grooming of children for sexual exploitation (using all forms of technology) is a growing problem worldwide. Grooming is the process by which an adult establishes or builds a relationship with a child, either in-person or online, with the purpose of exploiting them. Often, these perpetrators use images of children and teenagers they find online as their own profile pictures, to pretend to be a certain age in order to establish contact with a minor.

In particular, social media sites are widely used for online grooming. Offenders can use the Internet to target children by scanning social media or online gaming sites to find a young person's personal information before contacting them. Offenders then use that information to create a fake profile and request children of the same school, sports clubs, and/or neighborhood so that they feel more comfortable accepting the request and interacting with them and to eventually sexually exploit them. Child Internet users are particularly open to interacting with strangers because they use social media as a way to meet new people and create meaningful relationships online, rather than solely as a way to keep in touch with people they already know.

Over the last two decades, online gaming has similarly grown into a worldwide activity for adults and children alike. The functionality of online gaming platforms has evolved and expanded to include Internet access, messaging platforms, and photo and video sharing, therefore, enabling people around the world to communicate and play games with each other in real-time. Sexual predators increasingly use online games as a means to easily gain access to and connect with children.

If you are currently experiencing this or experienced something similar in the past, you are not alone; it is not your fault, and there are services that can help.

The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children has a free service: takeitdown.ncmec.org.

This service can help you remove or stop the online sharing of nude, partially nude, or sexually explicit images or videos taken of you before you were 18. This service can be used anonymously.

Can You See Me?
Online Child Exploitation

Secrets Video, by A21

Safety Tips

- + Avoid posting any identifiable information (i.e., your address, age, phone number, email, the school you attend).
- + Avoid adding people you don't know on social media, and block and/ or report those who make you feel uncomfortable, or research and ask other friends about the requester before you accept.
- + It's important to remember healthy relationship boundaries (i.e., your right to say 'no', expressing what you feel comfortable doing).
- + Choose a user name that does not reveal private information (i.e., age, birthday, last name).
- + Keep from taking or posting inappropriate or explicit images, and always tell someone or report to the app and/or the cybertipline if you receive a photo or a video that includes unwanted or uninvited content.
- + Do not meet a person you met online in person (especially by yourself); always ask permission from a trusted adult, and create a safety plan.
- + Adjust your privacy settings on social media so that only the people you allow can have access to your content.
- + Speak up. Always tell a trusted adult (i.e., your parents, an older family member, a teacher) if someone is making you feel uncomfortable, sharing inappropriate pictures with you, asking for intimate pictures, or threatening you if you tell someone. Ask for help by making a report.

National Center for Missing and Exploited Children

Child trafficking and online exploitation call: 1-800-THE-LOST (1-800-843-5678)

CyberTipLine: MissingKids.org

For more information on human trafficking and additional resources on preventing child trafficking, visit:

A21.ORG

© A21 USA, Inc. 2023. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without the prior permission of A21 USA, Inc. Requests for permission should be emailed to info@A21.org; subject: copyright permission.